You can get those stick things that you use to make shish kabobs. But instead of putting meat on it, but some veggies. And after you BBQ them, they're so good.

My mums vegetarian so we usually slice up potatoes and put some mild paprika..., mushroom capsicum and onion skewers usually with oil and a bit of garlic and oregano...

Vegetarian or vegan though? Usually some vegetarians eat seafood so some garlic marinated prawns or fish fillets with lemon chilli and parsley.. Depends on the person.. Grilled rustic bread with olive oil and sliced tomato and spanish onion is sooo yum...

Just experiment with veges and marinates or depending on the person, seafood...

Ronnie gave a good answer about the veggies kebabs on skewer sticks. You could add almost any type of veg, such as red pepper, mushroom, onion...you could even add some tofu, if that's to your tastes.

Many times I simply slice a courgette (zucchini) to get about 1cm thin strips, then grill them. Simple but tasty.

You don't just have to do mock-meat things like quorn and all that, you can make normal foods too. Like loads of delicious side dishes and falafels. I recommend making home made piteously bread with falafels and hummus as it can be a super tasty food choice. But I would add a few mock-meats like Linda McCartney vegetarian meats which are really good. Make potato food and lots of dips and snack things like nachos and salsa for mini side dishes. I can't really think of anything else because most things that go on the actual BBQ are either real or mock meats. Look up vegetarian BBQ dishes on google, as there are sure to be answers there.

ANY veggie cooks well on a grill.
So do portobello mushrooms.

You could make grilled vegetable kabobs or even BBQ-style tofu:
